As we explained earlier, many dealers will offer you car alarms for your motorhome. Some will even tell you that you have to have this particular type. The reality of it is that you cannot normally establish exactly what you are going to get for your money, and what will or will not be done. Worse still is the fact that many dealers don't even bother to install the alarms themselves, relying on a third party to do the job. This may sound fine but in practice, does it work? Consider the following:

- ▶ Who will supply spares in the future?
- ▶ What happens if the installer falls out with the dealer and the dealer starts to give their work to another installer?
- ▶ What happens if the installer starts buying alarms from another alarm manufacturer?

These are all questions that you should consider. To help you establish which security system and which security firm is best for you, we have compiled the comparison chart above.
